"Superior to other case file books." --Chang-Kun Choi, Medical Student, Midwestern University School of Medicine

"Using clinical scenarios not only makes the reading fun and interesting, but it is far more engaging than sitting down with a bulleted text and reviewing detail after detail. This is a much better way to learn clinical information. I have not read a book like this before, and I certainly have enjoyed it." --Eric Hossler, Medical Student, James H. Quillen College of Medicine

"I LOVED this book! I would recommend this book to all third-year students... The book uses a clinical approach and does not lose sight of the pathophysiology behind the disease -- GREAT preparation for being on the wards! The subject matter is also deceptively detailed, with much more information than one normally finds in a text of case files. The reader can use the book as either a rigorous self-test or a read-through introduction to the subject. Once again - a GREAT text!" --Elizabeth Johnston, Medical Student, Emory University

Excerpt from The American Journal of Obstetrics and Gynecology, Vol. 2: July, 1921-December, 1921. Two methods at present are commonly employed; one, the introduction of a foreign body within the uterus to stimulate uterine contraction, Or the stimulation of uterine contractions by rupturing the membranes and lessening the quantity of amniotic liquid, or, second, the administration of drugs. The induction of labor by psychic effect. While occasionally successful, is unreliable. In inducing labor, it is well not to ignore the mechanism of labor. The unshortened and unsoftened cervix requires something more than simple stretching in a lateral direction at right angles to the long axis of the uterus. The dilating bag does not favor the softening or retraction of the cervix, and this is one of the disadvantages attending this method. The introduction of bougies or a Rectal tube, or gauze promotes the softening of the cervix, its retraction and obliteration, and is not likely to displace the presenting part. This method is not especially painful, or likely to result. In septic infection.

According to Levret, it equals in gravity the other eruptive fevers, and is almost always accompanied by abortion and premature delivery. Grisolle and Cazeaux, on the other hand, Observed two cases in which the pregnancy pursued its course. Bourgeois agrees with Levret Among fifteen cases Observed by him, he noted eight abortions or premature births of the eight children, five were non-viable (born before seven months) three at the seventh or eighth month. In women who were only between the second and fifth month of pregnancy, the disease pursued its usual course, but it became more severe as the pregnancy was more advanced. The premonitory symptoms of abortion appeared towards the end of the disease; as a rule, delivery did not occur until from one to three days later, and sometimes the disease had terminated. When women were attacked with the disease at the end of pregnancy, premature delivery took place at the outset, accompanied by fever and serious symptoms. The foetus was dead-born, or perished within a few hours or days after birth. The disease pursued its course and the women slowly recovered. In rare instances the, children were born with measles. Bourgeois saw one case, the infant being born fifteen days before full term and living only three days. Gautier collected eleven cases, in six of which the children presented the morbillous eruption. Measles occurring during pregnancy, therefore, may predispose to the death of the foetus and to abortion; it does not endanger the mother. The prognosis during the puerperal state is less grave.
